

Prepositions with specific verbs

Definition:

Prepositions with specific verbs are prepositions that are commonly used in combination with certain verbs to convey a specific meaning or to indicate a particular relationship between elements in a sentence. These verb-preposition combinations are often idiomatic and may have unique meanings or usage.

Examples of prepositions with specific verbs:

1. Look at: Used to indicate directing one's gaze or attention towards something. Example: "She looked at the painting."
2. Listen to: Used to indicate paying attention to sounds or music. Example: "He listened to the music."
3. Depend on: Used to indicate reliance or dependence on something or someone. Example: "The outcome depends on the weather."
4. Believe in: Used to indicate faith or trust in something or someone. Example: "She believes in the power of education."
5. Dream of: Used to indicate imagining or wishing for something. Example: "He dreams of traveling the world."
6. Think of: Used to indicate considering or remembering something. Example: "I'm thinking of buying a new car."
7. Wait for: Used to indicate staying in anticipation of something or someone. Example: "She is waiting for the bus."
8. Care for: Used to indicate looking after or taking care of something or someone. Example: "He cares for his aging parents."

Usage tips for prepositions with specific verbs:

1. Learn common verb-preposition combinations: It's important to learn and memorize common verb-preposition combinations as they are often used idiomatically and may not follow strict grammatical rules.
2. Consider the meaning conveyed: The preposition used with a specific verb can significantly affect the meaning of the verb and the overall meaning of the sentence. Pay attention to the nuances and meanings conveyed by different prepositions in combination with specific verbs.
3. Pay attention to collocations: Certain verbs are commonly used with specific prepositions, and using the correct preposition is crucial for natural and accurate communication. For example, "listen to," "wait for," "care for," etc.
4. Review and practice: Regularly review and practice using prepositions with specific verbs in sentences to reinforce your understanding and usage of these combinations in context.
