

Filtering

Bridges use hardware addresses to determine if information is going to a destination on the same network segment or to the network segment on the other side of the bridge. If the destination is on the other side of the bridge, the bridge forwards the information to that segment. A bridge improves efficiency because information is only forwarded to a different segment when necessary.

