

Redundant Paths

Routes that are not normally used to transfer information are called redundant paths. If a section of the network has been shut down for maintenance or is malfunctioning, the redundant paths can be used to transfer information.

