

Route information

When information passes through a brouter, the brouter first tries to determine the destination of the information by analyzing the protocol used to transfer the information. If the brouter can determine the destination of the information, the brouter acts like a router and transfers the information along the most.

