

Addressing

When a network interface card is manufactured, the card is given a unique hardware address. The hardware address is used to identify the network interface card when information is being sent or received on a network.

