Ports

A hub contains sockets, or ports, where cables from computer devices can be plugged in. Hubs commonly have 4, 8, 16 or 24 ports. Usually each port has an indicator light, called a Light Emitting Diode (LED), which lights up when a computer is attached to the port and turned on. Some LEDs indicate when information is being transferred through the port.