Addresses

Routers map networks and divide them into individual segments. Each segment is assigned a unique address. The network segment address and the address of the destination computer help the router direct information to the correct destination.