Security

Using switches can help ensure that the information users transfer over a network is secure. Unlike a hub, which sends information to every computer on the network segment, a switch sends data to only the intended recipient.