

Bridge information

If a brouter cannot determine the destination of the information by analyzing the protocol, the brouter uses the hardware address of the destination computer to determine which network the information should be transferred to. Once the destination network is determined, the brouter acts like a bridge and transfers the information to the network.

