Extranets

Many companies are now making parts of their private intranet available on the Internet, creating an extranet. An extranet allows users outside the company, such as customers and other businesses, to access specific company information. Extranets are not for the general public and security features, such as firewalls and encryption software, are often used to protect extranet information from unauthorized access.