

Backup

Many networks backup information on a central computer. When a backup is performed, only the information on the central computer needs to be backed up. This is quicker and more reliable than backing up data on each user's computer.

