Backup Connection

Companies that connect their networks to the Internet may rely heavily on the information and services available to them, such as e-mail. Some companies find it beneficial to have a second connection to the Internet using a different Internet service provider. The second connection provides a backup system should the first connection fail.