

Future Needs

When connecting a network to the Internet, the network administrator should keep the future needs of the company in mind. Some types of Internet connections are easier to upgrade than others. If a company is likely to demand higher performance from an Internet connection in the future, the network administrator should choose a connection that can later be upgraded to provide a higher bandwidth.

