

Prevent Loops

In a large network, particularly a network that was not planned properly, the same information may continuously transfer, or loop, around the network. Routers prevent looping problems by analyzing the information that is being transferred and directing it to the proper destination.

