Life is always unpredictable. So are its opportunities. An opportunity that we get today may no be available tomorrow. If we reject the chance at hand hoping to get better chances tomorrow, we are liable to get dejected. So it is always wise to accept and utilize whatever is at hand than being over-ambitious hoping to get bigger things tomorrow. Today is what counts. Tomorrow may never come. If one is offered an egg with promises to give a hen later he should accept the egg instead of rejecting it in the hope of getting a hen later which on the face is more valuable. If he rejects the egg and waits for the hen, the promised hen may not be available tomorrow. Thus he will lose both the egg and the hen. This is every true in life. We should be prepared to accept whatever good that comes in our way. It is unwise to reject those good things in the hope of getting better ones tomorrow.
