

Introduction of Useful Plants

Plants do a lot for our environment. Plants in oceans maintain balance in the ecosystem and are essential for the survival of various aquatic species. Most plants absorb harmful outdoor gasses and purify the air. Plants absorb carbon dioxide and produce oxygen to sustain life on earth. The roots of plants bind them to the soil, and photosynthesis is a process that occurs through plants' leaves.

