

Climbing birds

As the name suggest they usually climb on stem and branches of trees and they have a very sharp beak. Nuthatches, woodpeckers, and brown creepers are all considered to be tree-climbing birds. They have claws that allow them to grip onto bark for insect capture.

