

Mist and Fog

In winter water vapor condense into small water droplets and combined with dust particle and flow with air and make visibility tougher. This is called mist. Water vapor condenses into fine droplets and settle down on the dust particles present in the air. These condensed droplets hang in the air and make it difficult for us to see clearly it is mist. When the mist is very thick, it is called fog.

