

Migration

The mass movement of animals and birds from one place to another for breeding, feeding or protecting themselves from harsh weather conditions is called migration. Migration is the regular movement of the animals to a certain area.

This migration of animals is seasonal. They travel at different times of the year. Animals migrate in search of food, to avoid extreme intolerable climate and to reach their breeding grounds. Migration is when animals leave their habitat for another one that has better climatic conditions.