

Muscular System

The human body contains more than 650 individual muscles. These are attached to the skeleton which provides the pulling power for the body to move around. The main function of the muscular system is to provide movement to the body.

The muscles in which we can control the movement by ourselves are called voluntary and the one we cannot control are called involuntary muscles.

